Dan:

My understanding is that most of the key well index are the wells that the County has been monitoring for the past 40 years and some later drilled wells are used. The wells around are turned of for at least 24 hours. The method of measuring is from the top of the well a electronic device is dropped into the well that is on a wire. It hits water and registers. They used to use a string. I believe the NCSD has electronic devices that give continuous readings.

Those Key wells are used with a ModFlow 2 (or some other soft ware) program to draw a contour map. Jesse

Hi, Jesse:

Did they get their data from well depth data of did they use seismic or resistivity transects?
